Liberal and Labor Members Crowd Benches-Conservative Attendance Thin

BY WIRELESS PROM MONITOR BUREAU LONDON-Equality of the sexes has been politically achieved in Great Britain, with the passing of the second reading in the House of Commons, 387 to 10 votes, of the Women's Franchise Bill. The overwhelming majority assures an easy passage for the remaining stages of this 60-yearcontested measure of justice to women. The Liberals and Labor have both given notice of amendments in committee, but these are not expected to delay the final result, for they

Rise From $2,958,000 to $35,-000,000-Other Gains Also Linked With Prohibition

SPECIAL TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR RALEIGH, N. C .- North Carolina's 20 years' experience with prohibition has proved exactly contrary to what was predicted by those who in 1908 declared that to drive liquor out would curtail public education through the loss of license fees. Instead the State has found more and more money for schools—amounts considered wholly impossible in pre-prohibition days. For example, in 1908, the year local option was abandoned by a state-wide vote, North Carolina spent only $2,958,000 on public education; this year it will spend $35,000,000. Public school property 20 years ago was worth $4 .-917,312; today it is valued at approximately $95,000,000, while total enrollment of the schools has enrollment of the schools jumped from 497,716 to 824,151. Indeed progress and prohibition have gone hand in hand in North Carolina for the last two decades. When the people adopted statewide prohibition in 1908 saloons had already been banished from a large portion of the State, other sections still sanctioned the liquor traffic and intoxicants were carried into dry

Dry Sentiment Grows In 1923 a law was passed by the General Assembly, with but few disenting votes, strengthening the law of 1908 and making it conform to the Volstead Act. Submission of this measure to the people was not de-manded, so strong had become the lry sentiment. Perhaps the most striking educational gain under prohibition has been the increase in high school enrollment, which has grown from 7144 in 1908 to more than 81,000. Expenditures for rural education have increased from $1,876,000 to around $22,000,000 and those for urban education have increased about 1000 per

About 100,000 children are being transported to and from school daily in the rural districts, over good daily in the rural districts, over good roads, on which considerably more than $100,000,000 has been spent in the last seven years. In 1908 there was not a first-class highway of any length within the State.

Industry Keeps Pace The industrial development of North Carolina has kept pace. Dependable figures for 1908 are not available. However, as late as 1914 the total annual output of manufacturing plants was worth $289,000,-000. Today, $1,250,000,000 is invested in factories whose annual output is worth a like amount. There were those who contended prohibition would hurt business. In this, also, the effect has been the opposite. The total resources of state banks alone in 1908 amounted to only $47,915,000. The present fig-

Agriculture also has been a beneficiary of the era of progress in North Carolina. Crop values in 1908 totaled $142,890,192, while the value of all crops last season was $361,-605,000, exclusive of livestock.

PLAN PROPOSED TO CONSOLIDATE BRITISH DEBTS

Liabilities of the Old Country and Dominions Would Be Amalgamated

By Winness room Moniton Burnau the of noted financier and associate of the late Lord Milner on the latter's Colonial Economic Development nmittee, proposes in the April ssue of the National Review an inrenious scheme for the consolidation could effect a substantial saving in interest. While the countries of the British Empire now borrow at, he says, from 4% to 5 per cent, the United States can raise money at 3½ to 3½ per cent, a difference of 40 per cent in favor of the United States. He declares that it would be absurd to suggest that the security of the United States is 40 per cent superior to that of the British Empire."

Pinancial Editor's View

The financial editor of the Manchester Guardian alleges that Mr. Darling "seems to ignore the fact that if the criterion of net interest, the interest after the deduction of the interest after the deduction of the income tax were taken, the actual difference would be greatly reduced." The debts; according to the plan, might be converted into Empire 4 per cent preference stock and Empire ordinary stock. The holders of the existing £3,400,000,000 of debt would be able to apply for, say, £20 of Empire ordinary stock for £80 of Empire preference stock, in which case the whole £3,400,000,000 debt would convert into £2,720,000,000 preference and £680,000,000 ordinary stock. The Pope and his adviser then spent the greater part of the afternoon considering what reply, if any, should be made to the speedy carrying out of Signor Mussolini's warning about the suppression of Roman Catholic Boy Scouts and other bodies. etanding achievements in bet-pusing and some novel trends oblisciure in Europe and the A States are being reported for Indistrian Science Moniton in les of daily articles, of which illowing is the Afth.

SPECIAL PROM MONITOR BURRAT PARIS - Construction of 400,000 wellings over a period of 10 years is the outstanding project now under consideration by the French Government in order to break down the present stagnation in building and meet the constantly increasing demand for better housing.

The Government's solicitude is di-

The Government's solicitude is directed to what is known in France as the "classe populaire," or working class, whose needs have hitherto received only slight attention. Their requirements, on the other hand, have increased greatly since the war. Although the French population has not augmented in the past decade, the housing shortage in the towns and cities has never been so great. This is due to several causes. There has been, for example, a decided movement from the country to the towns and a large influx of foreigners into the cities. Then there were twice as many marriages in 1920 as in 1913. Old buildings pulled down have not as a rule been replaced by homes for the workers; instead offices or apartments for the middle and wealthy classes have gone up on those sites.

Higher Standards

taking place in 1921 in France than in 1906. Then came renewed activity and now it appears that the needs for offices, factories and large apartment houses have in a measure at least been satisfied. The attention of builders and city authorities is now being directed to the needs of those whose pocketbooks are less bulky.

The chief factors in checking operation of the natural law of supply and demand in house building has been the post-war rent restrictions prohibiting the raising of rents to more than double pre-war figures. The franc having dropped until other expenses were five times the pre-war prices, this made houses which had been rented before the war and not relinquished very cheap.

A law of 1926 provides that prewar rentz can be augmented in stages, until 1931, when the rent restrictions will no longer apply. Thus, while the rent for the old houses will have advanced, it is hoped that the present rents on new property will gradually decrease until they both stand at about five times the nominal pre-war rents.

The French reply does not contain a definite formula. That remains to be found. Yet the ground has been so thoroughly cleared, misunder-standings explained, and terminological confusions elucidated that it should be unnecessary for any further purals.

People are no longer satisfied with the housing conditions their elders put up with. By the new standards it is estimated that from one-fifth to one-third of the French population is "badly housed."

Warner-Johansen

A recital in Steinert Hall last evening brought Julia Warner, soprano, and Wilhelmina Andrea Johansen, also a soprano, before a friendly audience of good size. Through the singing Mr. Carl Lamson wove the usual skill of his accompanying. At first glance a recital by two singers with similar voices would not seem possessed of too interesting possibilities. Yet it transpired that these singers, both sopranos, have voices very ers, both sopranos, have voices very different in quality and size. Mrs. Warner sings with a rich, heavy warmth, with tones of vibrant depth. Miss Johansen's voice is very youthful, light, soft-textured and flexible ful, light, soft-textured and flexible in the upper register, heavier in the lower reaches.

Perhaps much of the pleasureableness which emerged from the recital may be attributed to the well-contrived program. Mrs. Warner first sang Pergolesi's "Se tu m'ami," then Widor's "Contemplation" (Did the composer really think he was writing a love song?) and after that Fourdrain's "Carnaval," rarely sung, yet full of color and brilliance. Miss Johansen's first songs were Scandinavian, three of Grieg's in the original text, "Hilsen," "Solveig's Lied" and "En Dröm," and a charming little Swedish folk tune "When I Was Seventeen." The vocal embellishment on the latter seemed in bellishment on the latter seemed in poor accord with the somber text, but that is often the carefree way of folk music.

$50,000 From Milton Income to Open Doors in Several New Investigations

Studies of where American business leaders come from, how to make oil paintings more lasting, what progress city zoning and planning are making in the United States, and a collection of New Testament manuscripts are among the research projects to which money has been allotted by Harvard University from the income of the Milton Fund for Research in 1998

These awards amounting in all to approximately $50,000, are distributed among 40 members of the Harvard faculty for expenses of investigation planned in a wide variety of departments of learning. The fund was received by the university in 1924 from the estate of William F. Milton, Frank W. Taussig, professor of economics, and Carl S. Joslyn, instructor, will investigate "from what social stratum American business leaders spring, whether success is due to nature or to nurture, to inborn traits or to propitious environ-ment." Prof. Harold H. Burbank will continue a study of the general property tax in Massachusetts.

Continued study in the comparison and correlation of New Testament manuscripts is to be carried on by James H. Ropes, professor of divinity. Kirsopp Lake, professor of ecclesias-tical history, will direct photographic work on materials discovered or gathered during the Harvard Sina Expedition.

An assistant will be employed in the Fogg Art Museum for the experimentation in methods of producing and preserving durable modern paintings. Henry V. Hubbard, pro-fessor of landscape architecture, will make a survey and analysis of city planning progress. Other subjects of research include electrochemistry physics, growth of plants, climaology sources of American history.

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (A)—Whole-hearted support of the American people for an American effort to stay international conflict is one of the greatest avenues to world peace, Newton D. Baker, former secretary of war, said at an intercollegiate conference on war at Wesleyan Un-versity.

An American public consciousness, awakened to movements for peace, coupled with the vast resources available to the United States for its own use or control in time of conflict, he indicated, places the United States in a foremost position as a potential agency for international harmony.

"There is a great deal to be said for the United States' activity in the Americas," he said, "and I do not believe the fact of intervention in Haiti or Nicaragua is to be analyzed but rather circumstances under which intervention is made.

Intervention to prevent banditry is justifiable, he said, and disputed the accusation of being imperialistic."

Norman Thomas led a round-table discussion.

Unlike Other Indians

"Certainly not," he said. "It's story I wish everyone in the United States could hear. Well, out in Arizona where I live, there is a tribe of Indians known to white people as the Papagos. Their real name is Taw-haw-no Aw-o-tahm - or the Desert People. I have known these Indians for a great number of years and have grown to love and respect them. As a rule, when one mentions the word Indians to those who don't know them intimately they get a mental picture of a romantic, colormental picture of a romantic, color-ful people rather given to aqualor and dirt, whose ancestors indulged in raiding, scalping and opportune butchery. Please don't get any such idea into your head with regard to the Papagos. Unlike most of the other Indian tribes in the United States they have always been peaceful agri-culturists and never war-like. In fact they have always been peaceful agriculturists and never war-like. In fact in the early days, whenever the Papagos were attacked and felt compelled to defend themselves in battle the braves who participated had to undergo four-day purification after the fight was over before they were allowed to mingle with the tribe and perform their ordinary peaceful round of duties.

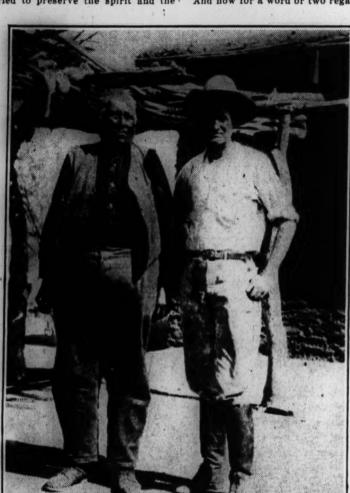

"The Papagos are among the oldest

"The Papagos are among the oldest Indian tribes in the country and have always dwelt in the one spot, namely, the southwestern corner of Arizona. They are not only bright, alert and peace-loving but they have always been firm believers in the presence of Eé-e-toy, the Spirit of Goodness, the Big Brother, or, as we say, God. They are confident that at the beginning of all things Big Brother came and dwelt in the midst of the Papagos. They believe that he sat down with the tribe and impressed upon them the necessity of being kind, gentle, loving and good. Brno, and Bratislava), Poland (Warsaw, Krakow, and Kattowitz), and Russia (Petrograd, Novgorod). The Jugoslav radio, however, though still in its infancy, anticipates a prosper-ous future. The existing station at Zagreb is already noticeable in in-ternational wireless, and stations are also being built now at Kjubl-jana, Sarajevo, Skoplje, and Du-brovnik

The greatest hopes, however, are centered on the Belgrade station, which, although provisional, started work to the joy of Serbian radio amateurs, a month ago, and which, when completed, will take a high position among international transmitting stations. Those at work on it are ambitious to make it the most powerful station in southeast Europe, and are already making keen propaganda to that end. They propose to provide a double program, one for home listeners and one for abroad. For the latter they are pre-

As the Butterfly was the signature of Whistler, so the ivory inlay is the autograph of Ruhlman. On this sideboard it forms a design of prancing horses, perhaps those of Neptune, driven by some flimsy creature with reins of blowing foam. Ivory is in-troduced also in the border around the top and in the legs. These ex-quisitely slender fluted legs bear their burden nonchalantly, soaring lmost halfway up the body of the sideboard, thus, without evading their function, denying its weight.

Lift out, drain, untie and remove to hot plate. Save the water for soup or sauce.

To vary the flavor of plain boiled greens, cook with a dash of seasonings, such as caraway seeds, fresh or dry dill, ground ginger, celery seed or curry.

Celery is the non-waste vegetable and is not an extravagance even when high priced. Every bit of it can be used; the inner white stalks raw, the large outer stalks as a cooked vegetable, the leaves can be cooked as greens or, like the root, thrown into soups, stews or sauces to add aromatic flavor. Even the water in which celery is cooked is excellent for stock or sauces.

The Lord & Taylor interpretations of the modernistic movement are provocative, and they are inevitably at so early a date, tentative only. They have not yet achieved a sincere expression of American sentiment and habits. They are jumpy, for they borrow for a moment and the next are flying off at their own tangent. Some of them are pretty bad, like the fireplace set in mirrors and the dining table, the top naroon and sand color, which is alert and dainty. Jourdain contributes a man's bed-

Conducted by MRS. HARRY A. BURNHAM Chairman, Division of Home-Making Department of the American Home, General Federation of Women's Clubs

THE Home-Making Column for mutual affections, confidence and rethis week is taken entirely from an article in the Buckeye, the official magazine of the Ohio State Federation. It was written by Mrs. George S. McCaw, chairman of the division of Home-Making in that State of the Making in that Making in the Making in th State and seems to us to be a splendid exposition of the aims of the division.

America has justly been called a home-loving nation. The home, like the church and school, has been recognized as one of the most fundamental of our human institutions. Like the church and school, the home is affected by changing conditions. To insure the most wholesome development of the home organized educational work is necessary.

In America we look to the public school to provide free elementary instruction in those fields of knowledge which must be applied by the mass of our population. For this reason courses in domestic science and home economics have long since been established. But these are not adequate to cope with the newer

From its inspiration spring those which are the morality. There is little reason to believe that the other agencies of character building-the state, the church, the school—can, to any large degree, displace the home as the thief source of education for living. Most American boys will be house-nolders and most American girls will be home-makers during their adult years. The development of our civilization demands that we give the younger generation training for ome-making--the most universal of occupations.

The future history of America will be shaped in large measure by the character of its homes.

If we continue to be a home-loving eople, we shall have the strength of character that comes only from a vholesome family life. Our homes must be comfortable and convenient; however modest they may be they should be places of beauty; they must represent to indi-viduals and families the center of

The well-planned home will provide for safety, economy, convenience, comfort and beauty. Beyond these needs it should provide for the cultivation that is best in family life. Longfellow said: "Show me the home wherein music dwells and I will show you a happy, peaceful, and contented home."

RESEARCH is not an end in itself but serves humanity only as it becomes applicable to modern life. This has been the ideal which has guided the School of American Research under the leadership of its director, Dr. Edgar L. Hewett. Established 20 years ago through the Archæological Institute of America, which maintains similar schools in Rome Paris, Athens, Jerusalem and which maintains similar schools in Rome, Paris, Athens, Jerusalem and Bagdad, the American School in Santa Fe has devoted itself to the ancient and modern cultures to be found throughout the Americas. This has included extensive research expeditions in Mexico and Central and South America.

Such practical results as a re-

Such practical results as a re-vival of Indian-Spanish architecture, a restoration of Indian pottery arts on a modern economic basis and es-tablishment of small museums all over the State are traced to the per-sistently held ideal of the school.

Situated in Santa Fe, the center of the oldest inhabited area within the United States, the school has made an intensive study of southwestern history and prehistory. Research groups under the direction of trained rchæologists have excavated and udied the first homes of Americans in the canyons of the cliff dwellers, and the canyons of the crist dwellers, and the ruins of the great communal houses, recovering and recording the ancient artifacts, implements and personal adornments found in the excavations for further study in the school laboratories. Many of the pub-liqations of the school have been along the lines of environmental conditions which shaped southwestern civilization. For the Spanish period archives have been studied in Santa Fe, in the City of Mexico and in Spain, which have thrown new light on the early Spanish history of

An Achievement

No line of research has been of more outstanding importance than the study of native communities such as the Indian pueblos with their as the indian pueblos with their religious and social organizations and especially their arts. One of the great achievements of the school has been the recognition of Indian arts in human history, and the furthering of the revival of these arts among the modern Indians. The school has been instrumental in the revival of ancient Indian

"With this in mind, the school has collaborated with the University of New Mexico this year in giving courses in general and social anthropology and the archeology of the Southwest. The School of American Research is the first to co-operate in this way and we believe that it will lead to satisfactory results. Too often lead to satisfactory results. Too often schools of research are restricted in of Albania's territorial integrity in schools of research are restricted in their usefulness by isolation. This has been thought necessary for intensive investigation, yet isolation is no guarantee for that. In fact, it is best served by the continual influence of researchers on one another and by the stimulus of the public and institutions upon them. It is so easy for the isolated research worker to lose sight of the fact that science for the isolated research worker to lose sight of the fact that science and scientific discoveries are for everybody. The discovery of new truths are of little importance until the application of these truths has become a part of the life of the ne a part of the life of the

"One of the methods used in bringing the results of research into the practical use of the people has been the establishment of small museums over the State. The offices of the school in Santa Fe act as a distributing center for such scientific material as may be shown in cases in city libraries, club buildings and schools. These include collections of ancient pottery, fabrics and all cultural material. A series which is being started in the state university at Albuquerque and in the public library at Raton shows the evolution of records from the earliest potsherds which suggest the religious thought as well as the artistic ability of the people, pictographs found upon the walls of the cliff dwellings, facsimiles of Mayan codices, Cuneiform tablets and Egyptian hieroglyphs, all of which preceded the literary records of man, as well as the later written examples up to the best modern printing.

Active Museum Material

There is, however, one aspect of sensitive matter of whether a girl

Parents who are interested in what their daughters do at college are apt to sum up their aspirations for her in this way: "I want my daughter to make good." One is tempted to ask, "Make good what" particular. It is achieving recogniion-just why doesn't matter.

The trouble is that at college recognition is a thing of precarious value. It may mean a great deal or it may mean comparatively little. By senior year, perhaps half, perhaps more of the freshman "successfuls" are no longer in the forefront of their class, and yet freshman year no one could have said for sure which these "What die would be.

Not Always a Criterion

The importance of tangible recognition is pretty well estimated by the students in college and I feel that as a whole they set less value upon office, or some other form of recommendation, than do the parents. Novels about college would have one think differently, but then, novels of this sort must have a plot and a happy ending. As a matter of fact, it is the parents who care most; they are sometimes deeply disappointed in a girl whom her classmates and faculty would rate as very fine, merely because the daughter has no faculty would rate as very fine, merely because the daughter has no obvious presidentship or managership, or Phi Beta Kappa-ship to write home about. No school can do much more than to bring these things to light and to emphasize through its educational and scientific researches the potentialities of a country.

"The conception for the School of American Research has not been that of an isolated organization which works alone. It can only function at its best in connection with other institutions such as universities where there is a large student body. In this way research may guide and direct and inspire study which is far beyond its own ranks.

The new oar, with a spoon-shaped blade known as the "elliptic tip," has been pronounced successful by Coach Ulbrickson as a result of several trais. Radio Again Makes Big Advance-Buying Is Aggressive

NEW YORK, March 30 (P)—The stock market gave another demonstration of strength today as buying operations were resumed in recent speculative favorites, and a brisk demand developed for the copper, public utility, rubber, steel and railroad shares.

Trading showed a marked expansion in volume, with the ticker again falling far behind the market. Total sales in the first three hours ran close to 2,500,000 shares, with indications that the 4,000,000 shares mark would again be crossed before the end of the day.

Little attention was paid to the increase of about $46,000,000 in brokers' loans and the advance in the call money rates to 5 per cent coincident with the heavy calling of loans in preparation for month-end requirements.

Eadio was seein the individual fea-

General Motors was again taken in hand, and bid up 5 points to 190 by early afternoon. General Electric jumped 6½ points to 157½, the highest price since the splitting up of the old stock several years ago.

Copper shares were heavily bought on a further increase in the price of the red metal. American 'Smelting Anaconda and Calumet & Arizona all advanced four points or more, with gains of 1 to 3 points of most of the other nonferrous metal issues.

Adams Express, which was weak yesterday, rallied 8½ points, and du Pont extended its gain to nearly 8 points. Among the dozen or so issues to move up 3 points or more were American International, Brooklyn Edison, Consolidated Gas, Montana Power, Park & Tilford, Union Carbide, Union Bag & Paper and United States Rubber.

Ralis presented several points of strength, with St. Paul common, Delaware & Hudson, Illinois Central and Canadian Pacific showing early gains of 3 points or more.

Success of the Stinson endurance flight was reflected in a rise of 7 to a new peak by Wright Aeronautical. Big blocks of Sinclair Oil changed hands late in the day. Westinghouse Electric and the investment public utilities were among the last-hour leaders. Total sales again exceeded 4,000,000 shares.

Semispeculative issues continued to dominate the bond market today, with higher grade issues showing further irregularity, apparently in reflection of the recent stiffening of time money rates. General belief, however, that the higher rates were due to quarterend requirements rather than any material change in the credit foundation, supplied a firm undertone and recessions limited to small fractions.

St. Paul 5s of 2000 again moved to a new peak at 72% as compared with the low of 61%, reached shortly after the bonds were listed. Kayser 5½s advanced 2½ points to a new high at 120%, but later sagged about a point. Pathe Exchange 7s with warrants gained nearly 2 points.

Copper issues were quieter today, although Anaconda 7s reached a new high.

Dodge Brothers 6s eased off coin-ident with the weakness of the stock. Vickel Plate 5½s and Erie 5s showed

38\\( \) 38\ MECHANIZATION OF

INDUSTRY OPENS NEW EMPLOYMENT AVENUES

SPECIAL FROM MONITOR BURKAU NEW YORK, March 30-A decline in the number of workers employed in factories does not mean that persons are being thrown out of employment, according to a review just issued by Dominick & Dominick, members of the

New York Stock Exchange.

Workers released from employment in factories are finding work in other industries, the review declares. The development of new avenues for employment, it adds, is one of the most significant results of the increased production which is being brought about through the mechanization of industry.

"Although the output per wage earner between 1914 and 1925 increased by 40 per cent, the total manufacturing output increased over 65 per cent," the review declared.

"Its value rose from $24,000,000,000 to more than $63,000,000,000. Production costs were greatly lowered and higher wages created higher purchasing power. As a result, in order to meet the demand of the expanded market the manufacturer required 1500.

meet the demand of the expanded market, the manufacturers required 1,500,-000 more workers.

"A large number of the workers theoretically displaced by machinery, therefore, have gone back into the industry in order to handle the greater market which machinery has created. In addition a large number of workers have gone into new industries."

To illustrate the new openings for employment which have been established since the war, the review cites an increase of more than 750,000 workers in the automobile industry. The radio business, exclusive of manufacturing, has taken on about 125,000, it was added, while the motion picture theaters and service, exclusive of production, account for a similar number.

Since 1919, according to the estimates, increased employment in hotels and restaurants runs between 500,000 and 1,000,000 workers. "It is obvious that, since 1925, it required 71 workers to produce what 100 accomplished in 1914, it will require only 45 workers to produce the same amount in 1950," the review said.

Matthew C. Brush recently said:

"The man who plays 100% safe will always get probably his 4% but no more. He will never participate in the enhanced growing, fabulous future wealth of this country. He won't buy a good common stock but will buy only a guaranteed bond or only a gilt-edged bond or only a so-called 'high-grade' preferred stock. That does not make for his or his client's development."

CONFIDENT ON STEEL OUTLOOK
The Iron Trade Review says finished steel remains steady through an abb and flow of specifications according to products, and of operations as to districts. A more spotted market situation seems in the making, but March leaves the industry about where it found it—which is saying much for its inherent strength—and majority apinion over the immediate outlook is confident. CONFIDENT ON STEEL OUTLOOK face of the drastic over-supply of live animals. The top wooled lambs reached $17.25 for weight averages reached $17.25 for weight averages within $4 to 90 pounds.

Extreme weight throwouts bulked largely from $15.25 to $15.50. Clipped lambs of desirable quality and fnish cashed from $14 to $15. Aged sheep were scarce, accompanied by a strong demand, working prices unevenly higher. For the most part 15 cents easured the advance.

Shearing Lambs Strong

Feeding and shearing lambs in meager supply ruled strong to 15 cents higher. Most of the replacement shipments brought from $16 to $16.50, with choice shearing kinds up to $16 75. Colorado consignments in increased numbers were mainly responsible for the 15,000 increase in total supplies as compared was the previous week.

Again conditions in the dressed beef trade warrant a premium on weighty steers of good to choice quality, both locally and in response to a broader demand from the East. A considerable number of the market arrivals were from other market centers or at least of origin tributary to other principal markets, and came in response to the dependable reception accorded fed steers, here for the last week.

Stockers and feeders continue only in moderate supply which accounts for the relatively high price levels attached.

LONDON, March 30 (P)—The directors of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company have decided not to pay an interim dividend on f13,245,000 of ordinary capital, of which the British Government holds $7,500,000. A year ago the interim dividend was 5 per cent. It was recalled in financial circles that at the November meeting the chairman of the baard warned the shareholders that unless there was some radical change in oil prices there would likely be a reduction in the company's profits which might well affect the ordinary dividend.

C. P. R. Hotel

The final work on the Banff Springs Hotel of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be completed May 14. The new hotel contains 600 rooms, each with bath, in addition to several special suites for royal visitors. The construction work proceeded during winter months, the cold of the Canadian Rockies being overcome by the building of a wooden shell outside the actual hotel walls. This outer building was heated, thus permitting work to be done on the hotel proper. A new 18-hole golf course is a feature of the hotel, nestled in the trunk line territory to the Pacific magnificent mountain scenery of Alberta. A Word a Day

Esoteric This word means belonging only to the initiated or to the enlightened few; hence also confidential,

It is derived from the Greek ἐσωτερικός (esoterikos)—from ἐσω (eso), signifying within or inner, and should not be confused with "exoteric" which is its opposite and means public or easily understood by anyone. "Exotic" another word from the Greek, sounds much like this, but applies only to that which is foreign or not-native.

The term esoteric was originally used to designate the private and generally profound teachings of Aristotle; later it was applied to the doctrines of Pythagoras.

The idea of concealment or secrecy is conveyed by this word, as well as by "recondite." its synonym. The latter, however, im-plies a profundity of knowledge plies a profundity of knowledge which does not necessarily belong to esoteric.

What They Say SIR HARRY FOSTER: "One of the happiest happenings of the last three decades is that we in Britain are becoming year by year more sober. It is an index of advance in civilization and a growing self-restraint, and it is the outcome of, among other things, education, improvement in living conditions, and the quest of fresh air."

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW: "Go over a proof always with an eye out for these ready-made locutions and unnecessary 'quites' and 'teries' and 'fullies' and 'all' and 'always' and 'singularities' and other pickings from the rag-and-bottle stores of literature."

The Sunset Stories

Julius, the Black Panther, Turns Over a New Leaf

Once, high upon Black Mountain, in the deepest, darkest part, Lived Julius, a Black Panther, with a rather selfish heart. He wasn't interested in any person save himself, And never cared—so long as he had food upon his shelf. He'd lived so long FOR JULIUS that he'd now begun to grow into the kind of person whom one doesn't care to know. He thought he was contented in his bachelor's abode, A caller to his house he thought a startling episode. 'Twas far above the Mountain Fok—'twas off the beaten track—Yet Julius liked this mountain life, and liked his mountain shack.

Now when the wind would whistle, and the snow lay deep without, He'd chuckle to himself as in his house he moved about; He'd kindle up a fire that would make the chimney roar, And sit and toast his toes in ease upon his balsam floor.

Black Mountain borders on a lake of beauty, wild and free; And on its shores live mountain folk of every kind, you see. Occasionally Julius, just to have a little change, Would journey down among them, household business to arrange, And have a swim about the bay, or to the village roam, But, when night let its curtain fall, it found Julius at home.

Among the few Black Mountain folk who knew him well was one To whom—on Julius' lake-side jaunts—he'd very often come. This friend was Nickie 'Coon, and quite a social chap was he, And Mrs. 'Coon was also famed for hospitality. They loved to keep an open house for each and every friend; Of cordial entertaining this gay couple knew no end.

"My dear," said Mr. Coon to Mrs. 'Coon one winter day,
"But yesterday I met friend Julius on his homeward way
Up to his lonely house upon this lonely mountain peak.
Although he says he likes it, we both know its pretty bleak.
What say you if we ask him here, my darling little wife,
To spend a holiday with us, and taste of viliage life?"
"Delightful thought," cried Mrs. 'Coon. Said Nick, "To him I'll go;
And I'll wear my heavy mumer; it's a long climb through the snow!"

And I'll wear my heavy mumer; it's a long climb through the sno So Julius finally agreed, and in a little while He coasted down that mountain side to Nickie's domicile, It is to be confessed he didn't take to it at first, This hermit Panther must in social helpfulness be versed. They got around him gently, broke him of each selfish way and taught him kindly manners of the wood folk of today. He didn't mind correction: never did his courage droop When gently asked to use a spoon, instead of lapping soup! In turn he taught them many things they never knew before, and many wise and useful points in woodland mountain lore. When on a picnic in the woods they wished to cook their meal Twas Julius made the fire with his trusty fint and steel. Besides his growing kindlier, he grew quite "up to date." And frolics with the little cubs he sought to cultivate. He listened to the radio, and got to be a star At getting Woodland stations. Then he learned to drive a car!

Not many months thereafter, people saw, one sunny day, A moving van! At Nickie's door! Julius was down to stay! He built himself a little house right next to Nickie 'Coon, And now he keeps a housekeeper—the widow, Mrs. Loon.

On passing by his mountain hut, I found it locked up tight, And on the door this placard—I read it by moonlight. Rejoice! For what it said was this: "Have gone where I can give A helping hand to strangers, and to those with whom I live."

Protection, Not Defense

TWO New York banks have announced a new credit of $60,000,000 for the so-called rubber pool, half of which is to be made immediately available and the remainder to be ready when needed. This same "pool," known as the National Reserve for Crude Rubber, when established in December, 1926, was granted a credit of $40,000,000. This credit was to have expired Aug. 1, 1927, but agreement was then reached to continue it until April 1, 1928. A further continuation is alleged to be in prospect. Backed with resources now estimated to be approximately $100,000,000, the rubber manufacturers are, by this action, assured adequate financial backing to pool their resources and to buy crude rubber advantageously. Inasmuch as this pool has the unofficial sanction of the Government, it is assured that all manufacturers in the United States may expect to have their require-ments insured in so far as they desire to avail ments insured in so far as they desire to avail themselves of the plan.

To those who are inclined to weigh the news in the light of immediate developments only, this pool may be adjudged to be an agency which is not operating to the best interest of the rubber growers in the tropical plantations. As a matter of fact, the pool is not designed even primarily for the purpose of depressing the price of crude rubber, but for the purpose of preventing undue fluctuations in its price. The pool came into existence when, through open market operations which invited competitive bidding by manufacturers and brokers, the price of crude rubber was bid up to more than a dollar a pound. It was then organized to stabilize the price and to insure manufacturers in the United States an adequate supply of the commodity.

It was four years before this, November, 1922,

It was four years before this, November, 1922 when the British put into effect the so-called Stevenson plan of rubber restrictions. Under that plan exports of the crude from British colonies are prohibited when the price in the markets of the world declines below a point which is considered less than the cost of profuction. The Stevenson plan is supposed to operate automatically in such a manner as to insure to the rubber planters an adequate return on their operations. It was not the Stevenson plan, but rather the speculative influence which followed, that caused the runaway market in 1926 and gave impetus to the organization of the National Reserve for Crude Rubber in the Governmental interference in the free play of in some circles, yet it must be confessed that it has operated to prevent any extremely direful results in the colonies growing rubber. It has since been suggested, and sponsored by the Secretary of Commerce, Herbert Hoover, that the United States legalize import combines which could pool their resources and buy in bulk those commodities abroad which are controlled directly or indirectly by a nation. The suggestion of import combines grew out of the British determination to invoke the Stevenson plan on the rubber plantations. Seemingly the two schemes have for their object conflicting purposes, but when analyzed carefully it will be seen that they are primarily harmonious in intent. Both wish to insure a continuing supply of rubber, both would desire to preserve the industry, and both would protect the buyers and the sellers from any wild fluctuations in price.

Who Pays Corporation Taxes?

How far taxes levied upon the profits or incomes of corporations are shifted to the consumers of goods, or recipients of services, supplied by the taxpayer, is a problem that has been the subject of animated controversy ever since that form of taxation was suggested. It was held by advocates of the tax that it was a desirable method of raising public revenues because of the ease with which it could be assessed and the small expense involved in its collection.

A further argument advanced in its favor was that it was an indirect tax on the general public, and that through it large revenues could be obtained without incurring the usual protests against increased taxation. This view of the operation of the tax was opposed by many economists, who asserted that it would not be possible to shift the tax to the consumer in the form of higher prices or additional charges.

When the time arrived for revising the tax laws under which enormous revenues had been raised for war purposes, it was urged by Andrew W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, that taxes on corporations were an obstacle to the saving of necessary capital and its further investment in productive industry. In line with his recommendation the taxes on corporations were reduced. Since that time efforts have been made to secure further reductions, but so far the change in the tax rate has been inconsiderable. In an endeavor to ascertain the actual experience of the corporations under the tax, the National Industrial Conference Board has made an exhaustive investigation of the sales, profits and capital investment of 4644 large and successful corporations for the period 1918-1925. The conclusions reached from the facts submitted are that the corporation income tax cannot be shifted onto the consumer, except under unusual circumstances, such as during war times, or in the case of corporations enjoying patent, monopolistic, or similar special advantages, and that the tax does not affect prices nor the movement of capital investment.

Acceptance of this finding, that as a rule the corporation tax is not shifted, will not strengthen sentiment in the Congress for its further reduction or repeal. Tax reduction from which the great majority of consumers do not benefit is not likely to be favored in a Presidential election year.

Another Isthmian Canal

WHEN the announcement was made that United States marines had been sent into Nicaragua to protect the American Government's treaty rights to a prospective inter-oceanic canal across the Isthmus, critics of the Administration claimed to regard this as a mere subterfuge and a thinly veiled excuse for what they declared was officious intervention, a pre-text to justify a militaristic campaign. It was argued by those who claimed to doubt the bona fides of this reason that the period in which the construction of a second isthmian canal by the United States would be begun was still remote.

Now comes Senator Kenneth McKellar, a Democrat, with a proposal that the construction of such a water route be immediately undertaken, at a cost of not less than $200,000,-000, in order that provision may be made for shipping which the Panama Canal will be unable to carry in the course of a few years. Senator McKellar is among those who oppose intervention in Nicaragua, and he claims to believe that American marines should not be kept there. He advances the interesting theory that the opportunity for employment which the construction of the canal would afford would divert the thought of rebellious and recalcitrant natives from war and politics, "turn bandits into laborers, and restore American prestige."

There are reassuring indications that American prestige, so called, is not languishing, even in Nicaragua. If the Senator is correct in his presumption that increasing world commerce will soon tax the Panama waterway beyond its capacity he has justified the proposed financing of the project which he urges. But the American people will not be inclined to put the stamp of popular approval upon an obligation assumed for the purpose of regaining or restoring something they have never lost.

Settling Boundary Controversies

HAT much of the criticism launched against the United States with regard to its attitude toward Latin America is wholly unfounded may be gathered from the fact that the Washington Government on various occasions has been requested to use its good offices relative to settlement of boundary controversies in the republics to the southward.

A controversy of a somewhat complicated character recently reached its climax when an American fruit company started to build a rail-road into territory claimed by both Guatemala and Honduras. The appointment by Frank B. Kellogg, United States Secretary of State, of Roy T. Davis, the American Minister to Costa Rica, as mediator in the dispute, promises to bring results in that it is believed that Mr. Davis will be able to delineate a temporary line for the road, the permanent boundary settlement to Whether or not the Tacna-Arica issue between Peru and Chile is again to occupy a promion what the American State Department can accomplish toward getting the commission, which has been sitting in New York for almost a year, to function and bring matters to a focus. At the Havana conference of American republics it was suggested by the United States that the quarter-of-a-century-old dispute between Costa Rica and Panama over the Atlantic boundary be settled between the two countries themselves, and there is strong hope that this advice will be followed. In 1900 the Pacific boundary controversy was settled by the President of France. In 1910 Chief Justice White was requested to settle the Atlantic boundary controversy. But his decision, handed down in 1914. was not accepted by Panama. When war resulted in 1921 the United States found it necessary to intervene. The issue is one that perhaps can best be met by the interested parties getting together and ironing out the differences. Mediation between countries where boundary lines are concerned is never an easy task, and when it is found that in various instances the United States has discharged such tasks with the evident desire to be fair all around there should be no two opinions as to the value of such service.

Home and School Co-operation

A MONG educators it is commonly agreed that A one of the most acute problems of the school is the establishment of a co-operative relationship with the home. Until the recent past the task of effecting a rapprochement between these two fundamental institutions of society appeared to be impossible of achievement. Teachers and parents, despite their common interests in the children of a given community, seldom understood one another's purpose and point of view. The organization of parentteachers' associations remedied in part this unfortunate circumstance.

Of late years, moreover, there has been a growing tendency among teachers to study their pupils in the environment of their own home. The officers of the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior have recently declared-that the practice of employing visiting teachers "to find out why the school does not function effectively" is steadily growing, and is producing happy results. It is affirmed by the Department of Education that "many children in our city schools need special help because of maladjustments either in the schools, the homes, the neighborhoods or in the children themselves."

In other words, the whole child is studied, not only during an intensive classroom period of from three to five hours a day, but in moments and under conditions of home associations and community environment. The number of visiting teachers engaged in this type of educational activity is steadily on the increase. First adopted into the school systems of New York, Boston and Hartford, Conn., in 1906-7, this method of home-school co-operation has now spread to seventy-four cities, and many of these cities have as many as fifteen to twenty visiting teachers.

Maladjustments in scholarship are thus handled in a constructive and sympathetic manner.

The manifold activities of these visiting teachers in no way constitute an intrusion on the prerogatives of the parents. Nor do they represent an effort on the part of the school to diminish in the slightest the peculiar responsibilities of the home in the matter of training children for a happy community and for the more formal duties of citizenship. Quite the reverse is true. The school and the home have a common stake in the proper development of the Nation's childhood. Both institutions are strengthened through these commendable efforts in the direction of mutual understanding and reciprocal service.

Progress, the Order of the Day

WHEN a man who has enjoyed as wide an experience of young people as has Judge George D. Alden, formerly justice of the Fourth District Court in Plymouth, Mass., comes out in their defense, his word carries weight. Speaking recently before the members of the Traffic Club at a dinner held in the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston, he emphasized the fact not only that the boys and girls of today are not so bad as they are ordinarily painted, but also that "the modern girl is fundamentally as sound as her sister of yesterday," and that the "boy of today is facing his duties with greater honesty and with greater purity than did the generation that is passing."

Wholesale condemnation of the youth of the present generation is never going to solve the problem of today's young people. With the breakdown of some of the old conventionalities of the past, many of which had no actual value, the pendulum has, in certain instances, swung to the opposite extreme and the true sense of freedom has seemed to become confused with license. But do those who spend so much valuable time and energy in shaking their heads over the peccadillos of the minority stop to think of the thousands of splendid boys and girls who rose magnificently to meet the crisis of the World War and of the thousands of others who are today taking their responsibilities

Problems are facing the present generation which are somewhat different from those which confronted their parents. It may even seem that the letting down of barriers is making human experience more complicated, but may not these very things be in some way a sign of progress? No longer can mankind shelter so easily behind the flimsy walls of ignorance and hypocrisy; the youth of today is facing problems with wider open eyes. The old glamour and glitter of many things may be gone, but have we not grounds for believing that something finer and better is slowly, but none the less surely, taking its place?

The Thrill of a Quiet Time

ARADOXICAL as it may seem, there is in a quiet time a thrill that no exciting adventure can surpass. But the quiet time must carry with it a mood, a mood induced by the desire to get away from the roar of traffic, the hum of industry, the bustle of the city, the streets throbbing with activity. What better than to drive out of a brightly lighted city at night into the calm of an ocean front, deserted almost by humanity, with the great sky and sea, wrapped in tranquillity. Or just to sit by a log fire quietly and ruminate after a busy day. Joy unspeakable!

Nor is it a thrill easily forgotten which the traveler, weary of his load, experiences as he stops on the edge of a lake in the Rockies and looks across the water which forms in the bottom of a cup made by towering mountains -a thrill born of the peace of remote spaces, of the beauty of the clouds as reflected in the lake. Nor is it easily forgotten by him who penetrates the Maine woods and exults in primitive conditions which were enjoyed almost alone by the Indian. Nor by him who goes to sea to revel in the glint of the sun on the waves, the porpoise leaping in sheer delight.

Author and poet alike have thrilled to the song of mountain and sea. Tomlinson tuned his lyre to the waves. Thoreau communed with nature in the woods near Walden Pond, woods that have been aptly described as having given free rein to his noble thoughts. To him there was music in running brooks and sermons in stones. He loved to watch the seasons breathe upon the meadowlands. Yet, great as was the thrill these men had, it perhaps gave them no more joy than the average man or woman may experience if they learn to appreciate the thrill of a quiet time, the thrill to which Milton gave voice in the words: "Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly."

Editorial Notes

Price Collier wrote a quarter of a century ago that England is primarily "a man's country." The eighth member of the gentler sex-Mrs. Walter Runciman-has, however, just been elected to the House of Commons. Moreover, Attorney-General Hogg recently stated that there are 1892 women magistrates in England and Wales. Thus today women are not only helping to make the laws, but are administering them as well, and neither young nor old boys make the slightest objection.

The changing value of the dollar and the increasing variety of things that may be bought with it make doubly interesting the statement of one industrial engineer who is quoted as saying "that in the next few years costs will be lowered and wages raised to such an extent that every farmer and wage earner will have the consuming power which today is enjoyed by only those who have incomes of $10,000 a year.'

Wordsworth could not say of any one of those among the crowds that annually throng the Boston and New York flower shows that:

> primrose by a river's brim A yellow primrose was to him, And it was nothing more.

War Documents of 1914

By DREW PEARSON

FF GERMANY had not rejected Mr. Bryan's overtures for a conciliation treaty in 1914, undoubtedly she could have prevented the United States from ever declaring war against her in 1917.

This fact is clearly disclosed in the diplomatic correspondence for the year 1914, now published for the first time in full by the State Department in Washington.

When the Archduke Franz Ferdinand was assassinated in the sleepy city of Sarajevo on June 28, 1914, William Jennings Bryan was occupied in a leisurely negotiation of his conciliation treaties—treaties which now are recognized as the broadest peace pacts which the United States has ever signed and which are being used as the foundation of the new arbitration treaties.

But with the Sarajevo disaster, Mr. Bryan's negotiations became electrified. During the months of July and August he sent fervent cablegrams to his ambassadors abroad urging them to push the conclusion of treaty

"Eighteen peace treaties ratified vesterday," Mr. Bryan telegraphed Ambassador Herrick during the first turbulent days of August. "Is the French Government disposed to consider signing treaty agreed upon when Great Britain is ready, or must it await the conclusion of the war?"

A similar note went to Great Britain. "It seems de sirable that it (the treaty) should be signed as soon as possible in order that both countries may have the benefit of it in case any dispute should arise as result of the war.' And after another month of negotiations, the treaties with France and Great Britain were signed, simultaneously, on

These treaties provided that in case of any dispute there should be a cooling off period of one year, during which the question at issue should be investigated by an international commission. The treaties applied to any and every dispute, and they continued in perpetuity.

Germany, however, was not anxious to sign such a pact. Judging from Ambassador Gerard's dispatch of Feb. 19, 1914, a cooling off period was exactly what she did not

"There is no probability whatever of Germany signing," Ambassador Gerard reported on that date. "Have not only tried regular authorities, but have made other repeated efforts and talked with professors, members of Parliament, etc. Find public opinion here against treaty, not on the ground that they are unfriendly to the United States, but because if they signed with us they might be asked to sign by some European nation, and if they re-fused that nation, refusal would seem hostile, and to sign would be to throw away the advantage Germany has as the result of great sacrifices in being European nation readiest for immediate and decisive blow at war."

This dispatch, remember, was sent in February, six months before war was declared. But even after that blow had fallen, Mr. Bryan persisted in trying to per-

"Seventeen treaties have been signed," he telegraphed Ambassador Gerard on July 15, "We are very anxious to have Germany join with us in one of these. The German Ambassador is now visiting in Germany. Please see him when he reaches Berlin and go with him to the Foreign Office and suggests the area of the second suggests the area of the second suggests the second s Office and suggest the propriety of considering at once the details of the treaty so that Germany can sign on the same day with Great Britain and France. . . . It will be very gratifying if the German treaty can be signed simultane-

To this Ambassador Gerard replied:

"Asked Bernstorff, who is at country place, to accompany me Foreign Office about peace treaty. Received reply, 'Sorry will not be in Berlin for some time. Am reply, 'Sorry will not be in Berlin for some time. An afraid no use taking steps about peace treaty.'

"I again took the matter up Von Jagow, Minister for Foreign Affairs, but regret to report absolutely no chance Germany signing for reasons stated in my previous dispatch (that of February, above quoted)."

On Aug. 17 Secretary Bryan sent another urgent appeal:

"If German Government will authorize its Ambassador to sign treaty, its ratification can be secured before Congress adjourns. It would be a great triumph in diplomacy if it could be so arranged that treaty with Germany could be signed on same day as British and French. If favorable opportunity presents itself, please bring matter to atten-tion Foreign Office."

Four days later, Ambassador Gerard sent this cryptic seven-word reply: "Sorry to report no hope peace treaty." Mr. Bryan, however, persisted. On Sept. 27 he wired Gerard: "If Germany and Austria will agree to similar treaties, the success of the plan will be complete." Again, two days later, he telegraphed Count von Bernstorff that the twenty-sixth conciliation treaty had been signed and that "it would make our joy complete if your Government and Austria would enter into treaties similar to those already signed. Aside from our desire to have your country included among those to whom we are joined by these treaties, I would be personally much gratified to have my name linked with yours in such an agreement. Will you please bring the matter to attention of your Government and use your great influence to secure their consent to such a treaty?

Bernstorff replied that he would be glad to look into the matter, which was a polite manner of turning down the treaty. He did nothing about it. Thus did Germany pass up an opportunity to sign an agreement which would have forced the United States to postpone any declaration of war for one year.

Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Japan were equally re-calcitrant in regard to Mr. Bryan's peace overtures. The Turkish Government replied that they were so busy that "they have been unable to give it (the treaty) desired attention." Japan's reply was most illuminating of all. Ambassador Guthrie reported it from Tokyo on Nov. 5 as follows:

"I have again spoken to the Minister of Foreign Affairs about peace treaty, but have failed to secure any expression from him. From the trend of his remarks I infer that he is not ready to adopt the policy of such treaties. He is also inclined to the belief that the United States and Japan have conflicting views regarding China. There is also always present strong dissatisfaction about California legislation, intensified by fear that hostile legislation will be passed. We can hardly hope for a favorable response, least until that fear is removed.'

Thus did Mr. Bryan's vigorous diplomacy conclude peace treaties with France, Great Britain and Russia-with which the United States later became allied.

From the World's Great Capitals-London

EARNED societies in London have been scratching their heads over a remark made by the Lord Chief Justice of England in summing up a case in the law courts. "If you give the title of 'Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society' or 'Fellow of the Zoological Society,' for a guinea or a little more," this legal luminary declared, "the thing becomes grotesque." Prof. Thomas F. Tout, president of the Royal Historical Society, explains in an interview the dilemma in which learned societies find themselves. He said:

It is very difficult to lay down hard and fast lines as to the qualifications of fellowship of a society which has a definite scientific object. Such societies have to consider two things. One is the promotion of the object of the society, and the other how to obtain the money to carry on the work. There are, of course, always people, who, for various reasons, like to have letters after their names. It gratifies their vanity. So far as our society is concerned we make a conscientious effort to bring in the right people.

Professor Tout has no delusions. Well-meaning folk undoubtedly exist who have guineas to spare and who quite innocently enjoy having letters after their names. Learned societies equally legitimately want guineas to further meritorious objects for which they stand. The problem is how to render these two sets of conditions subsidiary to one another without coming under the criticism of the Lord Chief Justice.

+ + + The gradual approach of the social season in London has reminded hostesses of a problem that became quite acute last year. To an increasing extent, unthinking young people, knowing that a large dance or reception was being given at some well-known house, have invited themselves and have upset the arrangements of the hostess regarding supper, etc. Last year the Duchess of Sutherland tool the lead in insisting that every guest shall show the card sent as invitation before being admitted, and it is expected that this rule will become general. At one private dance last year a careful check-up showed that those who had invited themselves numbered more than 200. Somewhat along this line a good story is being told of Lord and Lady Blank, who have a large country place where entertaining is done on a generous scale. Strangers are said to have spent the week-end there in perfect safety and superlative comfort. Lord Blank, not knowing a guest, assumes that Lady Blank invited him. Lady Blank takes the same view. As a result lines are likely to be a little closer drawn in the future.

The stretch of down land near Brighton known as the Devil's Dike has for some time past been in danger from the ever-encroaching builder. Now all apprehensions have been set at rest by the decision of the Brighton Council to purchase the estate which consists of close on 200 acres. The dike has gone through many vicissitudes. During the war it was used as a bomb-testing station. It has been the happy ground of the showman with swings, roundabouts, and an aerial railway, and it has passed into and out of various ownerships. Then at last it was scheduled under the Ancient Monuments Act and now, as the property of Brighton, all endeavors to exploit this beautiful bit of country for profit are ended.

+ + + "Honorable Sir-Seeing that one has kindly given £500,000 to help pay off the great debt the Nation owes, I felt I should like to do a little bit to help, so I am sending 10 shillings, as I am only poor." So runs a letter inclosing half a sovereign to the British Chancellor of the Exchequer, who has a national debt of some £8,000,000,000 to care for. "Mr. Churchill," says a prompt official reply which the sender has now received, "desires to express his thanks and warm appreciation of the patriotism which inspired this gift." The widow, who 2000 years ago cast her mites into the Treasury of the Temple, thus teaches a lesson still.

At a recent banquet at the Lyceum Club, in honor of Abraham Lincoln, a precedent was established. The attention of the guests was drawn to the story of Lincoln's nomination for the Presidency. A committee from the convention was to wait on Lincoln at Springfield with the official invitation, and his friends accordingly sent him a selection of rare wines to offer to the committee so that the future President's health might be suitably honored. Lincoln returned the gift with a tactful note saying he had never offered alcohol to his friends and would not now. The committee duly drank his health in water from the spring. At the banquet mentioned, the president (Constance Smedley, founder of the Lyceum Club) proceeded to remark that Lincoln's respect for law was an eminently British trait and pointed out that this was an opportunity to honor Lincoln's memory and to show respect for the laws of a great country. Wines aside and many distinguished guests, including several representatives of the British Government, drank the toast standing and in tumblers of water.

+ + + A firm of London publishers is holding a competition in which considerable interest is taken by literary people and the book trade. The firm seeks to discover who are the twelve most popular classic authors today, and named twenty from whom selections are to be made. A great number of entries have already been received and nearly all competitors put Dickens first. Aside from this one author there is an extraordinary difference of opinion on the others. Meanwhile another firm which has unusual facilities for determining literary tastes at the present time has named twelve in this order of popularity;

Eliot, Kingsley, Charlotte Brontë, Victor Hugo, Blackmore, Jane Austen, Charles Reade. + + + Announcements prepared by those whose enthusiasm for the English language outruns their knowledge of its complexities, usually emanate from Japan, India, or Africa. A Londoner who has been spending a few days in Paris has found a printed card in a hotel of that center which gives a hard run to the best Japanese attempt, in spite of the fact that many Parisians think their city is becoming more Anglo-Saxon than Gallic. Here are the

Why Not "Amment I"?

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

Your editorial entitled "Aren't I? Oh, no!" has in-Many years ago, a frequent visitor to our home was a young Scotsman—a well-educated man, who later attained to a very high post in a government office.

What has lingered more in my memory about him than anything else was his charm of speech and a most fascinating rendering of the phrase in question. He always said (as it would be spelt phonetically) "Amment condensed and easy form of "Am not I?" In so speaking, "Am't I" loses its hardness, and we are simply ising an exact equivalent to "haven't I?" to which no one

Whether this expression is in current use in some parts of Scotland, or whether it was merely a personal diosyncrasy I do not know, but it certainly carried much charm with it.

If "amment I?" were adopted, then why not also "shallent I?" and "willent I?" in place of the discordant "shan't" and "won't," ugly witnesses of the rush and hurry of the present age. M. A. C. hurry of the present age.
